

UC Davis Institute of the Environment

Our educational initiatives reflect a commitment to fostering a community of excellence that is grounded in diversity, equity and inclusion. With your support, we will build a network of forward-thinking leaders ready to face climate change head on.

Environmental Fellows and Scholars program

This program focuses on cutting-edge sustainability and environmental justice activities with the potential to bridge disciplines and Institute initiatives.

- Environmental Fellows: Six fellowships awarded annually to early- and mid-career faculty and professional staff.
- Earth Scholars: 20 graduate student awarded scholarships every year. Each scholar is paired with an Environmental Fellow mentor.
- Sustainability Scholars: 30 undergraduate students are organized annually into sustainability action research teams and work alongside Environmental Fellows and Earth Scholars.

Master's Program in Environmental Policy and Management

Our graduate student program provides advanced training for STEM students interested in pursuing careers in environmental policy and management, and applying environmental and climate-change science to real-world issues. Preparing the next generation of environmental leaders to take a collaborative, community-driven approach to policymaking is at the core of this program. Internship opportunities as Earth Scholars provides networking opportunities with external partners.

Institute of the Environment (IE) Thought Leaders

We convene national and international visiting scholars from various backgrounds—including higher education, governmental and non-governmental organizations, and private industry—to strengthen our intellectual community by sharing ideas and contributing expertise while in-residence.
